

in linda lewitt's works, linearity and rigor are less prominent; not only her titles are picturesque. form is dominated by color and perceived as immanently structured light and shadow. at the same time form is allowed to present itself as pure material. The ground of the canvas luminates the front. it is only the artist's personal style which puts limits on the intrinsically structure-oriented composition of the work.